Renowned author Elizabeth Gilbert kicked off the Big Ideas Series Thursday morning, weaving together stories and advice for the early morning crowd. The author of the 2006 international best seller Eat, Pray, Love, said as a child, the library was her second home. She described a difficult, exhausting, and frustrating time in her life, living in New York City as a young unpublished writer. It was here that she met a visual artist, selling her wares on the street, whom she tagged as her mentor. “Whenever I saw her I talked to her. She listened to me, day after day and then finally asked me, ‘What are you willing to give up to have the life you pretend you want?’” This was the last thing Gilbert wanted to hear. “I worked three jobs. I didn’t have any free time,” Gilbert said. Her mentor proceeded to ask her, “What’s your favorite TV show? Magazine? Do you have a favorite author? Restaurant?” After replying to each question, the mentor said, “It must be nice to have all that free time to enjoy those things ... I don’t want to have another conversation where you tell me you have no time.”

The moral here, Gilbert said, is that you will have to stop saying “yes” to things you want to do. “The question

Meet the 2018 PLA Presidential Candidates

With the ALA and PLA election season upon us, we wanted to share some information about the PLA presidential candidates, Nicolle Davies, Executive Director of the Charleston (SC) County Public Library and Ramiro Salazar, Director of the San Antonio (TX) Public Library. The winning candidate will serve as the 2018-2019 president-elect, 2019-2020 president, and 2020-2021 past-president.

In addition, there are also two ALA ballot measures, the first a proposed adjustment to ALA membership dues and the second related to the educational requirements for the next ALA executive director. On the latter ballot measure, the PLA Board of Directors—in alignment with ten of the eleven divisions, the ALA Board, ALA Council, and the Search Committee—is encouraging its members to vote “no” on this measure.

To get more information about the ALA elections visit http://www.ala.org/aboutala/governance/alaelection or check out their tables in the exhibits hall.

Our presidential candidate Q&A follows. The two candidates were

Daniel H. Pink talked about time of day, how people respond to different parts of the day, and timing trends in human behavior during Thursday’s Author Lunch. After the presentation, Pink signed his new book, When: The Scientific Secrets of Perfect Timing. The book provides suggestions on when to work, sleep and play, useful for freelancers and hourly-scheduled workers alike.

Great Expectations – Customer Service and the Future of Libraries

By Alicia Snarr and Paula Wilson

In a world where books are delivered instantaneously to a device of their choice and Wi-Fi is just a coffee shop away, why would customers choose the library as the place to spend their time? The answer is simple: they love the library. We provide free resources, engaging programs, and positive memorable experiences.

So, how do we entice people to keep choosing libraries? A great place to start is with a customer service philosophy. Customer service is one of the most effective ways to differentiate ourselves from all of the other places people choose to go. For most of us, we find the behaviors second nature but without a customer service philosophy each employee is defining great customer service for themselves.

When you return to your library consider asking coworkers how they define customer service. You’ll probably find their answers run the gamut from, “I give the customer what they want” to “I follow all of the policies we have in place.” Exceptional customer service doesn’t just happen; it comes from lots of little moments added up over time with intentional and consistent efforts.

With a customer service philosophy in place everyone is working with the same playbook.

Have you ever been thoroughly let down by your favorite Italian restaurant and had to send the food back to the kitchen? At the end of the meal you decide to follow this one disappointment slide because of all the good years of eggplant parmesan you’ve had with them.

Understanding Power, Identity and Oppression: A Justice and Equity Workshop

By Katie Dover-Taylor and Amita Lonial

How can public libraries actively combat oppression in our communities, institutions, and ourselves? Mia Henry, executive director of the Arcus Center for Social Justice Leadership in Kalamazoo, Michigan, facilitated a day-long preconference in partnership with the PLA EDI Task Force to explore this question.

The day started with the basic assumption that oppression exists. Henry led participants through a series of conversations, exercises, and reflection activities to deepen their understanding of how oppression operates personally, interpersonally, culturally, and institutionally.

Through an exercise called the "Power Flower," attendees named aspects of their identity and discussed the parts of themselves they think about the most, the least, and the areas in which they have choice or power. Participants recognized that the aspects of identity thought about the most, tend to be tied to one’s sense of human value. As librarians strive to create more inclusive libraries, participants encouraged moving away from the discussion of privilege – which often seems to derail discussions about equity – to a focus on the idea of solidarity across human differences.

For more information about the Power Flower exercise or an introduction to these concepts, check out PLA’s free archived webinar, “Understanding Power, Identity, and Oppression.”

After examining how oppression and cultural dominance inform library core services – including policies, collections, programs, and staffing models – participants dived into U.S. history and learned about the strategies and tactics social movements have used to advance justice and liberation. The day concluded by reflecting on how libraries can apply these same tactics to its institutions and practices.

It is clear public libraries across the country are feeling a deep sense of urgency to address issues of equity, diversity, inclusion, and social justice. PLA launched the EDI Task Force in June 2017 to support members in deepening their knowledge and understanding of these issues and support libraries to take action.

The Task Force hopes to continue to provide education and training opportunities on this topic. Most importantly, the Task Force would like to hear from members as to what tools or resources would be most relevant to you and your library.

Contact PLA to share your ideas or sign up for the topic’s listserv.

Today’s Schedule – Don’t Miss These Exciting Events

7:30 a.m. – 4:00 p.m. Registration

8:15 – 9:15 a.m. Big Ideas with Steve Pemberton

Steve Pemberton’s story is about defying seemingly unsurmountable odds—overcoming abuse and neglect as an orphan in foster care to become a trail-blazing corporate executive, enlightened diversity leader, visionary youth advocate, and acclaimed speaker. His best-selling memoir, A Chance in the World, recounts his triumphant life journey and drive to become a man of resilience, determination, and vision. Now an upcoming major motion picture, A Chance in the World further amplifies Pemberton’s highly motivational messages: Believe in your dreams, rise above obstacles, create opportunities for others, and most of all, persevere.

Tim Wu Concludes Big Ideas on Saturday Morning

Saturday, March 24, 8:15 – 9:15 a.m.

Tim Wu is an author, policy advocate, and professor at Columbia Law School, and director of the Poliak Center for the study of First Amendment Issues at Columbia Journalism School. Wu’s best-known work is the development of Net Neutrality theory, but he also writes about private power, free speech, copyright, and antitrust. In 2014, he ran as the progressive Democrat candidate for lieutenant governor of New York. His book The Master Switch (2010) has won wide recognition and various awards.

Wu worked at the Federal Trade Commission during the first term of the Obama administration, and has also served as Chair of Media reform group Free Press, as a fellow at Google, and worked for Riverstone Networks in the telecommunications industry. He was a law clerk for Judge Richard Posner and Justice Stephen Breyer. He graduated from McGill University and Harvard Law School.

Wu is a contributing writer at NewYorker.com and a former contributing editor at The New Republic. In 2006, Scientific American named him one of 50 leaders in science and technology; in 2007, 01234 Magazine listed him as one of Harvard’s 100 most influential graduates; in 2013, National Law Journal included him in “America’s 100 Most Influential Lawyers;” and in 2014 and 2015, he was named to the “Politico 50.” He formerly wrote for Slate, where he won the Lowell Thomas Gold medal for Travel Journalism. In 2015, he was appointed to the executive staff of the office of New York State Attorney General Eric Schneiderman as a senior enforcement counsel and special advisor.

Helping your support staff understand the unique role that public libraries play in their communities can require a concerted effort. Melinda MacCall, Meaghan O’Connor, and Kim Zablud, from the District of Columbia Public Library (DCPL), came together to share one way they are doing it: the DCPL’s program, “Public Libraries 101: Fundamentals for Support Staff.”

“Our objective,” said Zablud, “was to ensure that staff understand the shared principles of public librarian-ship. This was mandatory training for all non-MLS frontline staff.”

DCPL developed a two-hour interactive workshop. “We wanted to stay away from job skills training,” Zablud said. Many of the library’s frontline staff had worked in the library for many years and the trainers had to be careful not to make them feel unappreciated. “We included their expertise and that wealth of experience made them knowledgeable participants. We brought all required staff through the course in one performance year. And now, new staff must go through the course as part of their training.”

The course started with a survey of 20 questions based on ALA Core Values. Staff were also required to read two articles, “Public Service as a Library Program” and “How Public Libraries Set Me Free.” MacCall said participant feedback was overwhelmingly positive. “There was something for everyone in the program and it was well-received.” Staff was also required to share a [positive] story about how their work has impacted them, or a customer.

Other things covered in the workshop included: The history of public libraries; case studies; nuts and bolts of collections and services; and Washington, D.C., and DCPL in context. “These topics were very conversational. People relax when we told them we aren’t going to tell them how to do their job,” said MacCall.

O’Connor said that three case studies were discussed. “These provided a way to look at abstract concepts with concrete situations.” Practical aspects of service were also talked about, such as how materials get into the branch and the demographic impact on services and collections. “Reflection questions and discussion with the manager were required to get the staff member’s performance review completed.”

Zablud briefly described the New York Public Library’s similar training, in which they asked the question of their staff, “If you were going to nominate someone to go to Mars to start an urban library system, who would you nominate?” As a result, 40 named staff members became the group to brainstorm what they wanted in the culture of their frontline staff. “Three words describe what New York Public stands in their staff: helpful, resourceful, and curious.”

“We didn’t want to forget about our business operations colleagues [non-frontline staff],” said O’Connor. “We did a pilot this year for non-public service staff to inspire organizational culture across the agency and help make clear connections between the work they do and service provided.”

is one of priorities. You need to know what you don’t care about … to figure out what you do care about.” She added that you may lose people, but the people you keep will become your tribe.

“The word that I have trouble finding anywhere is ‘relaxed,’” she added. “Are you at ease in this moment in history? Women worry about everything. You think it’s not responsible if you don’t worry.” She explained that the origin of the word is wyrgan, which means “strangle.”

“Worry is a rope you tie around your neck and it suffocates you. Concern, on the other hand, means to sort. We can have concern without worry.”

Gilbert said it is also important to have boundaries. When going through her first divorce, her ex-husband made a point to let her know that she was a terrible person. “The nicer I was, the angrier he became. There was a sense of peace that I hadn’t had in two years when I decided ‘no more.’ When a woman stands on her integrity there is no choice but to meet her there.”

“The last thing you need is mysticism,” explained Gilbert. “This is a very particular way of being and operating in the field of consciousness. The empirical is not the only thing happening here. There is an intelligent force in the universe.” She said that people who are mystics spend their life in a communication interacting with mystery and looking for a connection. So, Gilbert says, “you can relax; you are the most relaxed. ‘The most at ease and the most relaxed is the most effective.’”

“I would also ensure that we are sharing best practices from the field on how we are addressing our local challenges. It is not our place to know the next step is dictated by the ever-changing environment.

“What would your focus be if elected PLA President?” I will focus on ramping up our advocacy work in this time of political and financial uncertainty. I also think we need to continue telling our story in a thoughtful and impactful way that not only changes perceptions, but also moves us from being “nice to have,” to an essential service in all communities.

How can PLA best support the work of public librarians?
- Practical resources
- Dynamic training
- On-point messaging

What are the most important issues facing public libraries?
There are three key issues facing public libraries in the current environment:

1. Unintended Barriers to Access: As we assess our service efforts from an equity lens, it is apparent that library fees and fines are a detriment to those members of the community who need access to library resources and services the most. Specifically, I’m referring to those individuals who may have limited income to enable them to pay off fees and/or fines. Digital literacy is another important area. Public libraries have a key role in bridging the digital divide through programs and services that support digital inclusion. Transportation is another existing barrier to analyze and address. Libraries must seek integrated solutions appropriate to their communities, whether that is a closer bus stop, access to convenient parking, or improved sidewalks. These are complex dilemmas that require bringing multiple stakeholders together to find solutions, and it is essential that libraries explore and address them within our own organizations and with the necessary partners within our communities.

2. Competencies and Skill Sets Needed for a 21st Century Environment: The skill sets and competencies needed today to support the operations of a public library are vastly different than they were 20 years ago. Library personnel have evolved from specialists to generalists. This shift is dictated by the ever-changing environments of our public libraries as they are affected by technology, generational expectations and other factors. This evolution has presented us with just cause for revisiting skill sets and competencies required of library professionals that will have significant impact on staff recruitment efforts for public libraries.

3. Relevance as a Public Service Institution: Public libraries should continue to look for opportunities to be relevant in an ever-changing environment. Knowing and understanding the people we serve and anticipating the future needs of our communities are top priorities to our relevancy. We must embrace change and be willing to transform and adapt to the expectations of the communities we serve.

If elected, how do you plan to address the issues you have mentioned?
I plan to take a leadership role by providing platforms within the organization to bring these issues to the forefront of the PLA community. My expectation is that these platforms will cultivate important dialogues where best practices and innovative thinking can be shared within the profession. One of the greatest strengths of the library profession is our culture of sharing and learning from each other which supports us all in inspiring new ideas, accessing new perspectives and ultimately, discovering a path forward that makes libraries even stronger.

What would your focus be if elected PLA President?
Addressing and alleviating barriers to access. I’m very passionate about helping public libraries explore and implement ways to mitigate and/or eliminate obstacles to accessing the services and opportunities libraries provide.

How can PLA best support the work of public librarians?
It is important that PLA continue to inspire new thinking and dialogue within our profession and to continuously support and encourage growth. PLA serves as a leader and a strong voice to encourage transformation of our public libraries.
Customer Service

Having a reputation for good customer service is important because we know it can cushion us from a service failure. It’s like having money in the bank – every moment of good customer service is deposited into a checking account. The more in the account, the less impact a negative moment has.

Great customer service philosophies are flexible, grounded in common sense and acknowledge the occasional need for service recovery. When we apply these basic elements of exceptional customer service in our libraries the results can be magical. Learn more about applying, improving, or developing a customer service philosophy by attending Great Expectations: Customer Service and the Future of Libraries by the authors on Friday, March 23, at 4 p.m.

Need a Charge?

Take advantage of PLA’s Charging Lounge right next to the Internet Station, as well as a charging station in the PLA Pavilion, located in the 1500 aisle of the Exhibits Hall. PLA has also set up power strips for attendees to charge their devices in each of the program hallways and also in front of Ballroom A and B.

Paid portable mobile battery rental stations can be found around the Convention Center.

Increase Your Multilingual Content with Ingram Library Services and ODILO

Ingram Library Services, a leading provider of comprehensive services to public libraries, including access to 16.5M+ titles, and ODILO, an internationally recognized leader and provider of technology and digital content for US libraries and schools, have expanded the collections of multilingual eBooks and audiobooks for libraries.

This offering provides access to 1.4M+ multilingual eBooks and audiobooks along with 93 magazines and 36 Spanish newspapers. Titles in 240 languages including Spanish, Arabic, Chinese and more are available to patrons.

ODILO’s audio and ebook content is accessible through ipage®, Ingram’s complete search, select, order and account management tool. Libraries also have access to ODILO’s software to upload local content (music, videos, etc.), manage lending rules and host digital book clubs.

“Libraries around the world have shown a strong interest in building more direct relationships with their patrons. ODILO is dedicated to closing this gap by turning over control of the user experience to libraries who know their patrons best,” said ODILO CEO and Founder Rodrigo Rodriguez. “We are putting powerful multimedia tools into the hands of librarians to transform the reading experience as a whole. We want libraries to save money through our flexible purchasing models so they can reallocate their funding to building diverse and robust collections in ways that best meet the needs of their communities.”

ODILO’s marketplace features digital lending with bring-your-own-content hosting capabilities, an integrated catalog capable of sourcing content from different providers, social reading functionalities, and more.

“Libraries consistently say they need to provide materials in more formats and languages. By including ODILO in ipage, librarians can more easily serve the evolving needs of their communities by offering content in the languages they read and ordering it on the platform they trust,” said Dan Sheehan, VP and General Manager of Ingram Library Services.

Voting

Valley Oehlke, Multnomah County (OR) Public Library, offered their insights to data collected from a survey panel of 2,000 voters ages 18 to 69, living in areas with populations of less than 300,000, conducted between September 29 and October 4, 2017. The panel compared these results with the 2008 OCLC report From Awareness to Funding: A Study of Library Support in America.

Streams discussed the key findings in the 2018 results:

- 55 percent view the public library as an essential local institution.
- 53 percent feel libraries remain relevant in the internet age.
- Only 19 percent find book retailers easier to navigate.
- 70 percent of voters have visited a public library in the last year with an average of 8.6 visits per year.
- “A majority of voters say they would vote in favor of local library funding, 27 percent definitely would vote in favor and 31 percent would probably vote in favor of funding,” said Streams. She added however, that many voters are confused about the primary source of library funding.

“This gets really interesting when we compare the data to a decade ago,” continued Streams. “More voters now believe the library offers activities and entertainment you can’t find anywhere else and this is an important role for the library. More voters today see their library as a community hub. But, average visits per year to the library 10 years ago were 13.2 with average visits now at 8.6 per year.”

But fewer voters today are likely to see the library as a resource for children. In 2008, 71 percent saw the library as a place for homework help, compared to 51 percent in 2017. In 2008, 79 percent saw the library as a place to access computers and the internet. That number is 62 percent today.

“Voters today do not feel staff is as friendly and approachable as they were,” expressed Streams. “Fifty-three percent now see the library as a source of pride in their community, compared with 73 percent in 2008. Forty-six percent feel the library stimulates growth and development in the community, compared with 63 percent feeling that way in 2008.”

Clark said that the group of “super supporters” shows no significant change from the two studies. There is a big difference, however, in the group of probable supporters. “Super supporters believe the library is a better source than the internet. They have a deep emotional connection to the library. They have grown in their convictions over the last 10 years.”

“Probable supporters are still likely to support the library, but are less committed than they were,” Clark said. “The still have a deep connection to our values and mission.”

The whole world has changed in the past 10 years, said Clark. “It is natural that we would also see a decline in support.”

Oehlke pointed out that this report is a great opportunity to find some urgency. “Perception determines our value in our community. So, whether true or not, perception is reality.”

Full Color Library Hour Magnets from JanWay as Low as $.08 Each!

JanWay Company, the largest supplier of custom printed fundraising and promotional items to public libraries in the United States, is offering full-color library hour magnets for as low as $.08 each! From now until May 31st receive 20% off from JanWay’s already low prices.

Magnets are a simple yet effective promotion for libraries. According to a Purdue University study, the average person opens the refrigerator 20 times per day. That’s 20 chances a day that a person will interact with your library’s promotional magnet. Magnets can promote new services, important phone numbers, story times, bookmobile schedules, online services and, of course, advertise your library hours. Stop by the JanWay booth (#526) for more information. You may also visit www.JanWay.com or call 1-800-877-5242 for more details.
